London, August 3. To day come in Two Mails from Lisbon.

From the Camp at Abrantes, July 6.

HAD I had more good News to send you, you had heard from me oftner; but finding things go worse than I wish'd, I was willing you should have it from other Hands rather than mine. The Enemy is at length oblig'd, by the Heats, and want of Provisions, Money, and Shooes, to quit the Field. You have heard of the Loss of 4 of our Battalions, and the Truth is we were posted in such a Mahner that they might have pick'd up more, if they had known how, or had dar'd to push their good Fortune. The reason was, they acted in a Body, and we were so divided into several parts of the Country, that we could not possibly joyn to make Head against them, for they advanc'd into the middle of the Country and made great Advantage of their Bridge on the Tagus, whereas we had none on that River. Had we been all in a Body, we should have been stronger than they; and from the Disposition of their Soldiers we had ground to promise our selves good Success, for there deserted to us, only on this side the Tagus, 15 or 20 Men a day, Irish, Flemings, or Germans; who assur'd us the Desertion from among the French was greater; tho' few of that Nation came to us, because 'tis probable they either stole back to France, or were knock'd on the Head by the Country People. My Lord Raby's Regiment of Dragoons is here with Monsieur Fagel, who has under him between 4 and 5000 Men. The Duke of Schomberg is at Estremos with six Regiments of English Foot and some Portuguese. The Marques das Minas is at Pennamacor with 12 or 14000 Men; And we that are commanded by Monsieur Fagel are to march and joyn him. Our Affairs would soon look with a better Face were we in one Body, and under the absolute Command of one General, and had we Bridges over the Tagus, and sufficient Magazines.

Later Advices say, General Fagel has actually joyn'd the Marques das Minas at Pennamacor; but no Action has yet pass'd.

Another Letter from Lisbon runs thus, Our Affairs in general, relating to the War, have hitherto been unfortunate, by reason of our Troops being separated; but our general Officers give us Hopes that we shall have better Success the next Campaign; and assure us that the Enemies Force lies wholly in the Auxiliary Troops they had from France, that the Spanish Soldiers are pitiful Wretches, and that on the contrary the Portuguese when led on by good Officers will do great Service. 'Tis their Opinion likewise, that the Spaniards will certainly joyn us when our Army advances into their Country; and all the Deserters confirm the same, and agree that the Duke of Anjou is very jealous of it.

London, August 4. Yesterday Morning a Letter was sent by the Penny-Post to Mr. Edward Lloyd Coffee-man in Lombard-street; which Letter was subscrib'd Jo. Browne, was dated from on Board the Little St. Lewis off Bantry Bay in Ireland July 22. and contain'd in substance, That the said Browne coming in a Vessel of which he was Master, from the Bay of Campeachy for England, was taken by the said Little St. Lewis a French Frigate of 30 Guns the 14th of July. His Ship was leaky, and he told the Enemy of it, but they giving no heed to him, put 16 Men into her, with whom she sunk down in half an Hour after they had been in her. That the 3d Lieutenant of this Frigate, an Englishman, told him, that 11 Sail of French Ships, 6 of them being Men of War, (of which this Frigate was one) and 5 Privateers, came to the Island of St. Helena the 26th of April last and took it, as also 15 English East-India Merchant Ships (the Names of 13 of which are mention'd in the Letter.) That this Frigate was dispatch'd from thence the 18th of May to carry the News to France: That she left the French busie in fortifying the Island of St. Helena, and that the said French Squadron intended in June to set Sail for the Cape, with Design to meet our outward bound East-India Ships with their Convoy, who they were inform'd left England in April last. Browne adds, that after he was taken, the French Frigate took a Dutch Ship bound from Ireland for Holland, and ransom'd her for a certain Sum: Whereupon he pretends he took an Opportunity to write this this Letter to Mr. Lloyd, and (as he says in it,) inclos'd it in another to a Brother-in-Law of his dwelling near Strand-Bridge, and gave it to the Master of the Dutch Ship, to deliver it at his arrival in any Port of England.

'Tis very probable this Letter is a Forgery; but as we cannot possibly determine whether it be or not, and the Story having made a great Noise in Town, we found our selves oblig'd to give an Account of it.

Yesterday Stocks were as follows, Bank 129. New Comp. 254. Shares 25 & a qr. Old Comp. 129. Million Bank 89 & a qr. Sword Blades 84 & a qr. African 18 & a half.
